Prince Khaled told Arab News that SR309 million of the budget was in the form of aid in cash and SR45 million came from investments. Expenditures on projects and charity programs at the end of 1980 total ed SR12 million. The foundation's revenues during the first nine months of 1981 reached SR200 million, including SR130.5 million in cash aid. The balance of SR69.5 million represented the proceeds from investments.

Welfare spending totaled SR14 million while SR37 million was invested. A report by the trustees on progress achieved by the foundation during the financial year and the auditor's report also was reviewed.

The provisional budget for 1982 amounted to SR275 million, of which SR16.5 million was allocated for charity spending and covers scholarships, assistance and research, Prince Khaled added. The foundation earmarked SR25 million for long-term charity projects, including the cultural center in Riyadh. Another SR226 million has been appropriated for investment projects. One quarter of revenue generated by such projects will be spent on various welfare activities.

Earlier, the board fixed the foundation's preliminary capital at SR1 billion - the value of the foundations's net assets at present. The board also fixed a target capital (Continued on back page)

Israel court okays digging;

TEL AVIV. Sept. 4 (AFP) - The Israeli Supreme Court Friday gave archeologists the go-ahead to continue excavations in Jerusalem as Israeli military roadblocks kept West Bank Palestinians from a planned mass protest against a dig under the esplanade of the sacred Al-Agsa Mosque.

The court issued a temporary order authoritizing digging after a 15-day halt imposed by Minister of Education and Culture Zevulun Hammer. The court did not publish its reasons, but reports said digging would resume Sunday for an undetermined

The lawvers for the department of archeology of the University of Jerusalem. which brought the case against the minister's order, said the decision was a victory over religious intolerance.

They suggested that Hammer, who belongs to the Religious Party, had given in to religious pressure when he called off the digging. Earlier reports said he had been threatened by orthodox Jewish leaders, who felt the digs desecrated an ancient Jewish burial ground.

Meanwhile, some 10.000 Palestinians showed up at Friday prayers services at Jerusalem's Al-Aqsa Mosque to protest against excavations of a tunnel under the esplanade, Islam's third holiest site.

Tends of thousands of Palestinian were expected to rally to an appeal by Muslim leaders here Wednesday for a mass protest to the tunnel dig. But Israeli soldiers, manning road checkpoints, turned back travelers from the occupied West Bank.

"We were expecting more than 100 thousand faithful today," the West Bank religious leader Sheikh Akrama Sabri said, but the (Israeli) roadblocks prevented all the residents of the West Bank and even those from some sections of the city's suburbs from taking part in the Friday prayer ser-

He was speaking Thursday at a ceremony held at a camp near here marking the graduation of about 500 Fateh commandos who have completed a month's military training. # flees as cops fire teargas

CAIRO, Sept. 4 (R) — Egyptian riot police fired tear gas to disperse thousands of demonstrators who marched on Cairo's coptic cathedral Friday to protest against the arrest of Muslim militiants Trouble started after Friday prayers at the Al-Nour Mosque when university students and others streamed down Ramses Street in east Cairo toward the cathedral. About 100 meters (yards) away from the walls, riot police moved into the street and fired volleys of tear gas. Scores of people collapsed in coughing fits and others turned and fled.

The demonstrations followed a government crackdown on religious extremists in which 550 persons have been arrested in the past 48 hours, among them leaders of the Muslim brotherhood, mosque preachers and other militants.

The left-wing Unionist Progressive Party (UPP) said police also closed its headquarters Friday. A UPP statement said the offices were raided in the early hours and police confiscated printing presses, typewriters and party leaflets. The party, which has no seats in parliament. Thursday collected and distributed lists of the detainees. .

The protest march began after speakers at Al-Nour Mosque called on President Anwar Sadat to release the detained Muslims immediately. "It's shame on Egypt" one screamed through a loudhailer.

As the congregation left it was joined by other who had been praying in other mosques and a huge throng slowly headed toward the catherdral. Coptic drivers abandoned their cars and ran as the crowd pushed on.

Riot police wielding batons then moved out of sidestreets into the thoroughfare to fire tear gas.

President Sadat summoned editors of government-guided newspapers to his house in the Cairo Suburb of Giza Friday to discuss press treatment of the round-up.

Saturday the president will address a joint session of parliament and announce new measures to ease tension between Muslim extremists and the Coptic Christian minority after serious clashes this summer.

French rulers image intact

PARIS, Sept. 4 (AFP) — Most French people still have confidence in their newly elected Socialist leaders despite a fall-off in support over the past month, according to a poll published by the Figuro magazine.

The poll, conducted by the Sofres Institute at the end of August, showed that 62 percent of those polled believed that President Francois Mitterrand was doing a good job - down from 71 percent in July. But the previous poll was taken in the balmy post-election days just after Mitterrand's socialists swept into power, and the new poll followed publication of mounting inflation and unemployment

Prime Minister Pierre Mauroy also fared well - 68 percent of those surveyed felt he was doing a good job. All recent polls have ranked Mauroy at the head of politicians the French would like to see play a major role in the future, ahead of Planning Minister Michel Rocard, a popular figure who last year was seen as a possible challenger for the presi-

Prisoner gives up fast

BELFAST, Sept. 4 (R) - One of seven iailed Republican guerrillas on hunger strike in Western Ireland Friday ended his fast and was given medical treatment at the request of his family, a British government spokesman

He was the fourth man to come off hunger strike since the death campaign for prison reform started March 1. Ten guerrillas have starved to death in the campaign and another is near death. The spokesman said the family of Tatthew Devlin, a 31-year-old member of the outlawed Irish Republican Army (IRA). asked for doctors to save his life when he fell unconscious. He had been fasting since July

The British government says it is prepared to make some concessions once the hunger strike is over. It as rejected the guerrillas' demands for freedom of association, segregation from Protestant prisoners loyal to Britain and the right to refuse prison work. It says that granting these demands would amount to giving political status to men it regards as criminals.

> French Ambassador to Lebanon Louis Delamare died in hospital after being shot Friday by unidentified gunmen in Beirut, police said. A French Embassy spokesman said the gunmen stopped Delamare's car and pumped six bullets into him at close range, two in the head.

The ambassador was driving from the French Embassy to his residence, both in west Beirut, when the gunmen opened fire in the Barbir area. Delamare, a former press spokesman at the foreign ministry in Paris, had served for two years in Beirut. The attack followed less than a week after a visit to Lebanon by French Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson. While in Beirut. Cheysson had met with Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) Chairman Yasser Arafat.

A police statement broadcast by Lebanon's state radio said unknown gunmen opened fire at the ambassador as he was being driven back to his mid-city mansion known as 'Residence des Pins' at 2:10 p.m. local time (1210 GMT). The Barbir Hospital doctor, said Delamare "has just died of multiple gunshot wounds in the head, chest and abdomen." The doctor gave this statement: "He was nearly dead when he was brought in. Doctors tried to resuscitate him, but very little could be done about it. His heart had stopped and he had several injuries in the head. Attempts to resuscitate having failed, he was then pro-nounced dead" 15 minutes after being brought to the hospital."

Isaac Saliba, a Lebanese employee at the French Embassy reached by telephone at the ambassador's residence said Delamare's wife was currently in France. He was the father of five children.

No one made any immediate claim of responsibility for the assassination. The police statement on the state radio said a team of senior Lebanese officers moved to the scene and began investigations. Delamare graduated from France's prestigious National School of Administration. and beginning in 1947, held diverse diplomatic posts in Bucharest, Romania, Istanbul, Turkey and Tunis, Tunisia. In 1961, he returned to Paris to work at the foreign minissecretary of state in the ministry, and then as a technical counseller to then-foreign minister Maurice Couve de Murville. In 1967-68, he was chief of staff for Gorse. who had become minister of information. Delamare was named ambassador to Dahomey in 1969, returning to Paris in 1975 to take up the post as director of press and information at the foreign ministry. He took up his post in Lebanon Aug. 28, 1979. However, the official Iraqi News Agency said in a Beirut-dated dispatch a pro-Iranian group calling itself "al-Hussein's Suicide Squads" had claimed responsibility for the assassination.

The agency also claimed Delamare's Lebanese driver belonged to the pro-Iranian "Amal" organization, the largest militia in Lebanon that owes allegiance to Iran's Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini. But there was no confirmation of the Iraqi allegations and all Beirut newspapers said they had received no direct responsibility claims from anyone.

In Paris President Francois Mitterrand denounced the slaying of the ambassador as a "cowardly assassination." The foreign ministry, in its statement denouncing the slaying, said, "this criminal act can only serve to aggravate the tragic climate which covers Lebanon." In a telegram to Delamare's wife, Mitterrand said: "I have learned with sadness of the cowardly assassination of which your husband was victim in Beirut. Since the beginning of his assignment in Lebanon, Louis Delamare consistently performed his duties as ambassador from France like a great diplomat and a man of courage. ### Despite opposition Reagan to cut defense telling the White House that proposed cuts in WASHINGTON, Sept. 4 (Agencies) -The White House has said President Reagan would make a decision next week on defense spending cuts despite opposition from Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger to sharp reductions in the Pentagon budget.

Deputy Press Secretary Larry Speakes. who predicted Tuesday that military spending would be cut by as much as $30 billion, said Reagan would make the decision on defense budget reduction by next Thursday. Reagan himself told reporters on his return to the White House after a month-long holiday would be exempt from new budget cuts. But we are not going to retreat from our goal of building our defenses, he added.

Speakes said during the flight to Washington from Chicago where the president addressed a labor group Thursday that Weinberger was opposing cuts in the Pen-tagon's expenditure plans for the next five years. Asked whether Weinberger was fighting any such proposals, he replied: "Truc". Defense sources said Thursday Pentagon is projected defense spending increases could lead to elimination of one army division. retirement of warships and reductions in present fighter and B-52 bomber strength. Proposals made by the Office of Management and Budget to trimming military sepending boosts for fiscal 1983 and 1984 also would cause major slashes in planned purchases of new tanks, armored infantry fighting vehicles, ships and war planes through 1987, sources said.

In the case of M1 tanks, the budget rolldack proposais would result in the Reaga administration's buying nearly 400 fewer machines than projected by the Carter administration for that period. Also, a Pentagon analysis says the OMB proposals. which Weinberger is resisting, would significantly reduce planned increases in army ammunitions stocks for the Rapid Deployment Force, as well as trimming the number of army brigades that could be deployed to NATO and the Gulf area in the early stages of a war.

State efforts boost wheat crop in Zilfi

JEDDAH, Sept. 4 — There are 5,000 farms in Al-Zilfi and investments started recently at 500 other land plots. In a statement to Al Jacirah Friday, a spokesman for the Ministry of Agriculture and Water said that 30 million kgs. fo wheat were produced and 172,000 head of cattle were treated in

As a result of intensive efforts on the part of the ministry to reclaim as much land as possible, more than 80 percent of lands in Zilfi are now cultivable, the official said. Incentives provided by the ministry include land distribution and the extension of loans. subsidies and modern equipment. The government also provides guidance to the farmers, through the establishment of pilot fields. Moreover, seminars are organized frequently to popularize modern techniques and to give advice to the farmers. The latter are also given fruit saplings and high-production seeds. They are told how to immunize their plants and protect fruit trees. Instructions about proper irrigation and fertilizing are also given. The ministry gives guidance on the digging of wells.

Special teams equipped with all necessary remedies for the plants regularly tour the farms, spray them with insecticides and pesticides and help the farmers in various ways. Training courses are also provided for the farmers on the identification of various pests and various methods to economize water as much as possible. The farmers' attention is drawn to the fact that too much water leads to higher humidity that attracts pests. Furthermore, they are shown how to protect themselves against pesticides. Livestock breeding in the area is on the increase; because here also the ministry informs the farmers about sound cattle raising and what kind of animal fodder and water is to be given to the beasts. It also tells them how to immunize their cattle and how to diagnose veterinary diseases. In case a disease is detected, the farmers immediately notify the ministry's local branch, which so far treated 142,272 heads in one year.

Subsidies given to the farmers in Zilfi include, for instance, SR50 for each successful palm; SR0.25 per kg. of dates, and SR0.25 per kg. of wheat. Agriculture in the area was greatly mechanized in recent years, which augmented the area with arable land. The government supplies adequate fertilizers and has even cut down their price. Seeds are selected at the ministry's laboratories before they are given to the landlords. The ministry uses audio-visual equipment to increase the farmers' awareness about modern methods of agriculture and indicates to them the dates when each crop is to be planted in the area.

The best crops produced in Zilfi include wheat, barley, maize, water melon and various types of fruits. Potato and peanut culture is under promotion after preliminary tests proved successful.

The 60,000 donum area in which wheat is planted has produced 30 million kgs. of wheat this year. Last year, the wheat area was only 35,000 donums which produced 14 million kgs. of wheat. The 180-sq. kilometers of cultivated land in Zilfi is owned by 4,000 farmers. What is now needed is a cooperative society for those farmers to market their fruit and vegetable products and make cold storages to reduce damage caused by excessive heat in the region. Irrigation by spraying is also necessary to cut down water consumption, the official told Al Javiah.

Several projects have been successfully carried out in the area as a result of close cooperation between the ministry and the agricultural bank. They include projects for the production of green and dry animal feed; for the production of dairy products and for poultry breeding. There are at least 15 dairy

JEDDAH, Sept. 4 — The Interior Ministry arrested a fresh group of 31 persons, including three Saudi Arabians, who Thursday received prison terms of one to three years and were fined SR1,000 to SR20,000, on account of bribery and

Okaz reported Friday that the foreigners will also be deported and blacklisted. The heaviest penalties were awarded to the nationals. One of them, Saud Fadgoush Shelyan Al-Harbi forged a check. He was fine $R30,000 and will go to prison for one year. The other, Ali Othman ibn Ahmed Issa, was caught accepting bribe in his office. He was fined

Remedies suggested

Aliens' problems discussed

JEDDAH, Sept. 4 — Foreign workers in Saudi Arabia flee their sponsors or work illegally for others because they are underpaid, according to Ahmad Al-Yahya, director of labor office of the Western Province.

The official as well as other sponsors and workers were quoted by Okaz Friday as saving that workers sign contracts in their original countries before knowing the prevailing living standard in Saudi Arabia and the limitation of their salary. In many cases they are upset because co-workers doing the same job receive higher wages. Also, when their hard work is not appreciated by the owner of the enterprise, they flee.

Workers sounded by the newspaper though that one remedy could be provided by setting up some guidance body to receive the workers as soon as they arrive in Saudi Arabia and before taking up their jobs. They. should first be briefed on the country's laws governing labor; because some of them flee or work for other sponsors or fail to turn to the authorities to solve their problems and differences with their sponsor out of ignorance. In fact, there is a section at the labor office which tries to reconcile between the workers and their sponsors in case of dispute.

Otherwise, a first degree committee (court) issues a ruling within 30 days which takes effect unless contested by either party, the paper said.

More serious is the fact that some nationals import labor without really having an establishment.

They channel the workers to other enterprises and take a commission. Such persons deserve severe punishment, it was unanimously agreed. The snatching of labor by one enterprise from another was also reported. Yahya said that a committee meets every week at the office of Jeddah's district commissioner to consider such cases and to propose penalties including fine of a SR2,000 to SR10,000 and deportration.

However, Yahya added, the best solution to help put an end to labor escape is for the sponsors to pay the workers the wage they really deserve. They could also benefit from state regulations which permit the seconding of workers from one establishment or one sponsor to another for a period of three months. However, he noted, not more than 30 percent of the work force of any sponsor could be seconded. In such cases, a transfer of sponsorship is allowed.

Pugwash council condemns Israel raid on Tammuz

BANFF, Alberta, Canada, Sept. 4 (AP) — Israel's raid on an Iraqi nuclear research center June 7 at Tammuz was condemned Thursday by the Pugwash Council, an international group of nuclear arms experts dedicated to peace.

In a communique issued at a news conference winding up its annual meeting, the organization also called for an immediate resumption of disarmament talks, a satellite to keep an eye on the superpowers and formation of a world energy agency to help developing countries.

The Pugwash Council deplores the use of military force by Israel against the Iraqi research center, whatever Israel's perception of a threat to its security," the conference communique said. "We oppose in general the use of military force to settle questions for which peaceful solutions must be sought." The group also lashed out at "militarism" in several countries—" regimes where power is in the hands of soldiers"—although a preliminary report issued a day earlier was more cautious. In a document titled enhancing international security, organizers said: " Human rights require contious attention, but the right to survive in the face of a nuclear war is the overriding priority today."

He was in the Kuwaiti mission to U.N. Geneva offices from 1968 to 1973. He then became first secretary of embassy in Tehran.

The charges were made in the first hearing of a mass trial at a hastily-built courtroom in Metris, 15 kms north of Istanbul and the center of a military garrison. The 147 are accused of being members of the outlawed Turkish Communist Party, Turkish Revolutionary Peasants Liberation Army and the party's so-called provisional coordination committee.

The suspects, who have been in military custody for several months, were transferred to the heavily-guarded courtroom in armored vehicles from a nearby detention center.

Journalists and more than 30 defense lawyers who signed up for the case were searched twice before entering the courtroom, a onestory unimposing structure built to try thousands of other extremists still awaiting prosecution.

Israeli invitation TEL AVIV, Sept. 4 (AP) - French President François Mitterrand has told Israel's ambassador to France he would like to visit Israel this year, an Israeli newspaper reported Thursday. Yedioth Ahronoth reported that Mitterand accepted an invitation to visit here from Ambassador Meir Rosenne, whom he met Tuesday. Rosenne conveyed Israel's displeasure over the meeting earlier this week in Beirut between French Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson and Palestine Liberation Organization Chairman Yasser Arafat.

A foreign ministry spokesman was unable to confirm the newspaper report, which noted that Mitterand's projected visit would be the first to the Zionist state by a French president. France and Israel have long been at odds over Paris's Mideast policy, and the meeting between Cheysson and Arafat was viewed here as a setback to Israeli hopes that Mitterand's administration would change France's pro-Arab stand.

According to the newspaper, Mitterand told Rosenne he supported the Camp David peace accords and expressed the hope they would be extended to include other Mideast countries in addition to Israel and Egypt. The French president also reportedly expressed reservations about the European Common Market proposals for a Middle East peace, the newspaper said, although he emphasized the differences between the French and Israeli approaches-to the Palestinian issue.

Mrs.Rajai blames poor security in Algiers

TEHRAN. Sept. 4 (Agencies) — The widow of assassinated Iranian President Muhammad Ali Rajai Friday accused the head of security at the prime minister's office of responsibility for the death of her husband and Prime Minister | Muhammad Javad

Speaking at Friday prayers at Tehran University. Mrs. Rajai said: "The person in charge of security at the prime minister's office is responsible for the explosion through negligence and weakness." The two leaders were killed instantly last Sunday when a bomb exploded during a meeting of the Supteme Defense Council.

The widow said that her husband considered respecting security measures a "religious duty." She called on the people to prepare for new presidential elections, adding: "It is necessary to give martyrs to our revolution, as this is spiritual and not for material gain." The son of the late president, a boy of around 12 years old, then told the crowd that 'the way of the martyrs will be followed."

The prayer meeting, which fellow the last of five days' national mourning, was highly emotional, with many of the faithful in tears. Parliamentary Speaker Hojatoleslam Hashemi Rafsanjani, who is standing in as Tehran Friday prayer leader in place of Ali Khamenei, wounded in an assassination attempt earlier this summer, said: "We have 2,000 Bahonars in this country — as yet unkown, but all teachers faithful to the revolution."

Jalaledin Farsi, eliminated from the 1980 presidential elections — which brought now disgraced Abolhassan Bani-Sadr to power -owing to his Afghan origins, described Sunday's attack as "imperialism's last weapon." Turning on the People's Mujahedeen, whom several Iranian leaders have blamed for the attack. Farsi accused the dissident organization of "joining Bani-Sadr. Ghassemlou (leader of a Kurdish nationalist movement), the atheist Baathists and (French President Francois) Mitterrand and his military base."

Meanwhile, Supreme Court Chief Ayatollah Mussavi Ardebilli said on Radio Tehran that no decision had yet been reached on who was to blame for the bombing. He refused to refer to employees of the prime minister's office arrested Thursday as suspects, adding that "the people will be informed when the

Meanwhile, Iranian leader Nabavi disclosed that the device which exploded in the prime ministry killing Rajai and Bahonar was an incendiary bomb.

In New Delhi, Iraq's ambassador to India said Friday he hopes the upheaval in Iran will lead to the rise of new leaders there who will be ready to seek an end to the Iran-Iraq war. "The current turmoil in Iran is good because it will get out these people (presently in power) and bring in more sensible people," Ambassador Fadhil Al-Azzawi told the Associated Press. He maintained that Iran's current leadership does not want to negotiate an end to the fighting with Iraq.

"We will build (up the border area of Iran already taken by Iraq troops) and advance (further into Iran) if they do not settle this in the next round" of negotiations, Fadbil said. "We will not pull back one inch."

In another development, the exiled leader of the People's Mujahedeen party, Massud Rajavi, has expressed his desire to meet Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) chairman Yasser Arafat, and has confirmed meeting recently with a leading Palestinian official, according to a press report in Beirut.

The Palestinian Wafa news agency reported that Hani Hassan had been summoned to Beirut following reports of his contact with Rajavi. According to a PLO official, Hassan was currently on sick leave and had no brief to meet with Iranian oppositionists. If such a meeting was held, it would have been a private initiative, Wafa said. The PLO official noted that the organization's policy remained one of "non-interference in the domestic affairs of a friendly country."

In Islamabad, Pakistani President Gen. Muhammad Zia Ul-Haq' sent Ayatollah Muhammad Reza Kani a message Thursday congratulating him on becoming Iran's prime minister and assured Kani of his regime's commitment to "consolidating" friendly bilateral ties. The message coincided with the local publication of an interview in which Pakistan Foreign Minister Agha Shahi vigorously denied reports that "Iran was hostile to

Pakistan bans men's entry into women's institutions

ISLAMABAD, Sept. 4 (AP) - Pakistan President Gen. Muhammad Zia ul-Haq. who has launched a campaign to "Islamize" Pakistani society, has banned men from entering women's schools, colleges and other institutions, a government-owned newspaper reported Thursday.

The Pakistan Times quoted Northwest Frontier Province Education Minister Abdul Hashim as saying that the presidential directive would be strictly obeyed and that he himself would not visit all-women institutions. The move is keeping with Zia's wellpublicized efforts to transform Pakistani life along Islamic lines, which seeks to segregate men and women in many social situations. Women have been instructed to keep their heads covered and the information ministry has announced it would encourage curbing the use of women in advertisements.

The directive followed Tuesday's death by stoning sentence awarded a high school bus driver in Karachi who was convicted of seducing one of the student-passengers and then eloping with her. However, it was not known whether Zia's order had any connection with the case which made headlines and drew editorial reaction from around the country.

.S. refuses visa to Capucci

ROME. Sept. 4 (R) — The United States refused a visa to Monsignor Hilarion Capucci, the Greek Catholic archbishop because of his links with "terrorist or subversive groups", a U.S. Embassy spokesman has

"The visa was denied under section 212A 28F of the Immigration and Nationality Act which prohibits entry of people connected with terrorist or subversive groups," he said. Capucci, a former archbishop of Jerusalem, holds an Algerian passport.

The spokesman said the State Department had been consulted about the decision and the Algerian Embassy had been informed of the refusal. The prelate, a supporter of the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO), was imprisoned by Israel in 1974 but was released in 1977. Earlier Thursday he protested against the decision, calling it "a form of violation of human rights."

Capucci said he was surprised by the move, particularly since he held a written commendation from the U.S. government for his efforts during the Iranian hostage crisis. As special papal envoy, he traveled to Tehran several times last year, visiting the hostages and bringing back the bodies of eight U.S. servicemen killed in an abortive rescue mission. "I can confirm that," the U.S. Embassy spokesman said, "but it does not affect his eligibility for a visa,"

Last four F-16s arrive in Israel

TEL AVIV, Sept. 4 (AP) - Four F-16 warplanes, the last of those delayed by the Reagan administration under an embargo ordered in the wake of Israel's bombing of Iraq's nuclear research center last June, arrived in Israel Thursday, the military command said.

Their arrival completed delivery of the 14 F-16s and three F-15 fighters held up by

toward the end of November. People have been saying for some time that U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig will meet with his Soviet counterpart, Andrei Gromyko, during the next half of this month at the United Nations General Assembly in New York. The main purpose of the meeting is to arrange for a would-be encounter between Leonid Brezhnev and Ronald Reagan.

The meeting, in Bonn, between Brezhnev and Schmidt will not be the first. But Moscow is interested in cooperation with Bonn in a string of economic fields, including, for instance, the Siberian gas project, and in promoting opposition to the neutron bomb. Despite the fact that West Germany is one of the most important members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO), Moscow hopes to convince Bonn of some of the advantages of exceptions.

As for the Brezhnev-Reagan meeting, it is considered part of the strategy of every Soviet leader which consists in acquainting himself with the U.S. president personally to talk to him and think with him directly and try to understand him and leave some impression on him.

Since the death of Stalin, such encounters have become an established tradition of Soviet leaders. Their main concern is not to alienate themselves from understanding the leaders in Washington, for a very valid reason, namely they feel that they don't understand quite right what the main leader in the West

To date, there have been meetings between Khroustchev and Eisenhower and Kennedy; Kosygin and Johnson; and Brezhnev, on the one hand, and Nixon, Ford and Carter, on the other. The only benefit, each time, has been that the Soviet leader relieved himself from his complex of inferior understanding of the personality of the U.S. leader, without for as much reaching an understanding with him. The matter gives way to several interpretations.

Saudi Arabian press review

The developments in Lebanon and the outcome of the recently concluded Taif conference of GCC foreign ministers appeared in editorial comments in Friday's newspapers.

Dealing with the foreign ministers conference of GCC Okaz said it has further strengthened the historical, social, economic, intellectual, cultural and religious ties of the Gulf states.

The paper said that the formation of GCC was not directed against any country but has been aiming at pooling of the resources of the Gulf states to realize the Islamic Arab solidarity. The paper called on the Gulf states to follow a nonaligned stand toward the West and the

Commenting on the situation in Lebanon, Al - Jazerah expressed optimism over efforts underway by the Arab Follow-Up Committee to defuse the tense situation in the country (and for putting an end to the fighting between various factions and for achieving reconciliation among them). The paper cautioned the Arabs against the Israeli enemy plots and its agents inside Lebanon for keeping the situation tense and unstable

Gulf newspapers meanwhile welcomed the resolutions and recommendations reached by the GCC foreign ministers. Al -Bayen newspaper of Abu Dhabi said the final communique issued by the council has cleared doubts attached to the formation of GCC as a regional treaty for the Gulf states. "Contrary to such wrong assessment, the GCC will always be of a great help and support to the Arab nation in its struggle against the Zionist enemy," the paper added. Al-Inihad observed that the council's declared support for Crown

Prince Fahd's peace plan for Mideast should be considered as a milestone for any future solution of the Middle East problem. Akhbar Al-Khaleei of Bahrain called on the leaders of the Gulf states to devise a unified defense strategy for safeguarding the security and stability of the Gulf region and for launching development programs for the states of the Gulf.

New York cool to Begin's visit

By Arthur Spiegelman

Menahem Begin may find the usual warm welcome accorded a visiting Israeli prime minister in this heavily Jewish city has noticeably cooled when he arrives on Sunday.

Israeli officials and U.S. Jewish leaders freely admit that Begin has a poor chance in the country on which Israel most depends for support. In the past weeks, Americans' traditional warm regard for Israel has been severely tested by Israeli an attacks on Iraq's nuclear reactor and residential buildings, a strike in which 400 were killed.

Many U.S. newspapers and magazines have severely criticized Begin and cartoonists have had a field day depicting him as a mad bomber. Typical of the reaction was a widely reprinted cartoon showing Begin and his wife sleeping while a meowing cat keeps her awake.

"Menahem...I can't sleep with that cat meowing out there," his wife complains in one frame of the cartoon. In the next, Begin is shown grabing the phone, saying: Hello...send in an air strike." According to Harvard University political science report "public commitment to Israel in 1981 is not what was in 1973. There has been a definite

It blames the provocative policies by Begin, such as his stand on Palestinian autonomy and increasing Jewish settlements on the West Bank, as being partly responsible.

"Begin's image seems less clear in 1981 than it did in 1973 that Israel has no intention of giving up Arab populated areas and this must affect American public opinion."

The image of Begin as it appears frequently these days in the American press is that of an inflexible, insensitive, pedantic and provocative

Time magazine said this week that Israelis and their U.S. supporters should "really know that for all the real external threats faced by the Jewish state, none is more difficult to deal with than the anger of Begin, Israel may become not only a net liability to the United States, but its own enemy." Many people in the politically active American Jewish community, the world's largest Jewish grouping, are worried by Begin's image. In the words of one leader, Nathan - perlmutter, "it is depriving Israel of the means of supporting her-

"Begin has become a convenient scapegoat - a Haitian doll with sticking pins in it," said Perlmut-ter, director of the Anti-Defamation league of the B'Nai Brith.

"Personalities are misled. Take charming Lord Carrington (Britain's foreign minister) fc. example. He feels the PLO is not a terrorist organization. The personality of a leader has means only up until a given point. It is a cosmetic factor," said Jimmy Cagney of New York.

Cosmetic factor or not, Begin's authorization of the Beirut bombing at that time stirred intense debate in the U.S. Jewish community, whose support of Israel has been unswerving and uncritical.

But the debate waned swiftly, partly due to Israel's explanation of the raid and partly because the U.S. administration's decision to sell AWACS (Advanced Warning and Controls Systems) planes to Saudi Arabia.

Leonard Fein, the editor of the Jewish magazine Moment, who is a frequent Begin critic said the reason for this was that "every time the Israeli leadership does something that disturbs American Jews, the U.S. government does something that disturbs them even more."

Fein said that deferring to the judgment of Israel's leaders is something deeply ingrained in American jewry.

Even though he criticizes Begin, Fein asked: "What do you do when you are confronted with a statement by a U.S. official who says the PLO must be recognized.

"Suddenly you realize that as difficult as Begin may be, there are more sinister enemies of American security lurking closer to home."

Whatever its feelings about Begin may be, the Jewish community is gearing up to prevent the administration from selling $8.5 billion worth of arms to Saudi Arabia, including five AWACS. --

Property boom hits India's major cities

NEW DELHI -An unprecedented property boom has hit India's major cities fuelled by untaxed money and remittances from Indians working in the Gulf.

In Bombay, Calcutta, Delhi and Madras, the country's four largest cities, urban property prices have registered a 300 percent increase since 1978, according to real estate agents. For the first time, property developers in the Indian capital are being flooded with enquiries about residential and office accommodation which may only be ready for occupation three or four years from now.

Tajwant Singh, managing director of a con-struction company, said: "Five years ago, it was a buyer's market. Now it is totally the opposite. You have just to advertise and buyers turn out in hordes." Although construction costs are still low at about 120 $15 per square foot, prime urban property in Delhi and Bombay is selling at $125 to 200 per square foot.

In Bombay, India's industrial and commercial hub, luxury apartments with a floor area of 1,000 square feet (nearly 100 square meters) are planted to be sold at $500,000 — a price very feet Indians can pay. The boom has also hit some of the seedier areas of the city where two-room tends meats are selling for up to $5,500 even though some of these old constructions are scheduled to be demolished. Delhi is no different. Houses the three years ago are selling at three to five times to orginal price.

Estate agents attribute the skyrocketing rates to general shortage of accommodation as well at high bidding by Indian businessmes who have brought back huge amounts of money from Iran and Afghanistan because of unsettled conditions there. French Bunshaw and Keki Mukadan. estate agents of Bombay, say increasing number of enquiries are also being made by Indian immig rants settled in England. Flats in one air-conditioned building in Bombay have been bought by overseas Indians, reainly from Britain, and some are now being received. more than 10 times the original price of $98,000 in 1975. Between January and June this Indians working abroad had remitted home some $3.2 billion while total foreign exchange restricts in June stood at $5.2 billion.

Funds from abroad have pushed up priors but an even more significant role is played by "black money" (money which has not been declared for tax purposes). There is no official estimate of black money but The Indian Express newspiper estimated earlier this year that it ranged from $15 to $30 billion. Many of the property deals are now conducted partly in black money. Estate agents also openly ask for payment in foreign currently.

One result of this is that those who decline to pay in black money—i.e. without a receipt the unable to find suitable accommodation. Separal diplomats in Delhi have had to live in total months because they were unwilling to pay modes the table. Until only three or four year ages houses with large lawns were easy to find in Delhi But this is no longer the case and single surey houses are being demolished to build multi-mary buildings.

The annual demand is for some 10 million becar. ing units across the country but private and government agencies are able to build only about 400,000 a year. The total backlog in 1980 was estimated at nearly 23 million which at the prerate of construction could take decades to build leaving little hope for any significant drop in property prices. (R)

Nonaligned fragmented 20 years after birth By Michael Battye Speculating on how close the movement was to col States and Moscow the movement could be

BELGRADE -

The nonaligned movement is celebrating its 20th anniversary this week fragmented and frequently impotent, but with many of its members still convinced its ideas are those of the future in a world growing increasingly tense.

Twenty-five countries attended the first nonaligned summit in Belgrade and brought the movement formally into existence. Led by presidents Tito of Yugoslavia and Nasser of Egypt and Indian Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru, the nonaligned movement was born as a third force between the rivalries of the United States and Soviet Union, the two superpowers. In its early days, it was largely ignored by the powerful nations of the West and the Soviet Bloc. But today it has grown into a force to be reckoned with in international politics.

"With its built-in two thirds majority at the United Nations, the nonaligned movement is often a pain in the neck to Western interests, but you have to admit they learned their lessons from this spell" commented a Western diplomat.

It is common now for ministers from outside the movement to say something nice about its strength and importance," said a nonaligned diplomat. 'They may not like us, but they daren't say so any more." From the 25 countries that gathered here in 1961, the movement has expanded rapidly to a membership of nearly 100.

They range from conservative to radical Communist nations such as Cuba and Vietnam and revolutionary countries like Libya. Its political diversity has brought major problems to the movement which has sometimes seemed to spend more time attempting to maintain its original principles, particularly that of independence from both power blocs, than making progress toward implementing

Those problems have been particularly acute over the last two years, which have seen a Vietnamese invasion of Kampuchea, a fellow member of the movement, the Soviet intervention in nonaligned Afghanistan and the war between Iraq and Iran, both members of the movement.

All three instances have seen the nonaligned movement powerless to prevent violations of its basic principles of non-interference in the affairs of other states and the settlement of disputes by peaceful means, as has the recent South African incursion into nonaligned Angola. Before the last nonaligned summit in Havana two years ago, which followed close to the Vietnamese action in overthrowing the Khmer Rouge regime, some diplomats were speculating on how close the movement was to col-

In addition to the these difficulties, radical members led by Cuba, the current chairman, were pushing hard to see the organization takes a pro-Moscow attitude. The move was defeated, partly by the personal intervention of President Tito, one of the founding fathers who died last year.

A victory for the moderates, however, did not prevent Burma quitting the movement with foreign minister declaring, "The principles of the movement are not recognizable any more: they are

But they say that a conference of foreign ministers in New Delhi last February brought the movement back to a more even-handed position between the two superpowers. Officials of Yugoslavia, among the most optimistic of the noualigned nations, say the United Nations has proved largely unable to solve the major problems facing it and thus it is too much to expect the nonaligned movement to achieve more.

"We are moving steadily," said one official. "The Iraq-Iran war, for instance, will be solved by the nonaligned movement. When the two sides are ready for a solution, which is not yet, it will be along the lines of nonaligned proposals."

Officials, however, are less sanguine. "Because of wide differences among (the members) concerted, action on behalf of the movement as a whole is becoming impossible," Indian Professor Bimal Prasad told a seminar. The future of the movement has weakened.

Sources at the seminar, which brought to Yugoslavia academics and politicians from within and outside the movement generally agreed that the only real cement holding it together was the so-called north-south dialogue. "That is the only thing, apart from Namibia (South West Africa) on which everyone can agree." was a typical comment.

The dialogue, due to recommence in Mexico next month, has been a major nonaligned initiative aimed at setting up what it calls a new world economic order that would redistribute wealth and technology on a global scale. It has made little progress and sources at the seminar said they were worried that failure to make progress in Mexico could seriously weaken the movement's remaining unity. "If the north-south dialogue looks like it is over, does the nonaligned movement have a future? one asked

Officials of several nonaligned countries at the seminar replied in the affirmative because, they said, the principles of the movement attracted wide support and always would.

With the increase of tension between the United States and Moscow the movement could be in for a boost because most people have nowhere else to go" one commented.

But over the next 12 months, international events aside, the movement is facing one critical issue that could further strain its bonds - the possibility that the Iraq-Iran war could harm the next three- arly summit due to be held in Baghdad.

"It is going to be very difficult to hold a summit in a country at war and one at war against another nonaligned nation at that," one diplomat said. "Iran is saying there will be no summit in Baghdad and many other countries will take similar views," he said. "I don't see a way out. All we can do for the moment is hope this silly nonsense between Iran and Iraq is over by then." (R)

Fuel savings predicted Sails raised to test commercial cargo use

NEW BEDFORD, Mass. - At 11:15 s.m. The 220-foot general cargo tramp steamer Mini-Less left a wharf here, took a harbor pilot aboard, and headed out into the afternoon southwesterly on Buzzard's Bay. The tough fishermen left behind on the quayside, busy welding their rigs and preparing to take on fuel pill, hardly followed her with their eyes. Ships have come and gone from New Bedford for 300 years. And they go for profit, or they come to scrap.

The unglamorous Mini -Lace was going for profit took — but when she got beyond the breakwater, she did something a merchantman hasn't done there in many generations. – she spread a sail to the wind.

On her foredeck, a single 100-foot high unstayed mast turned slowly, unrolling the 3,000 square feet of decron sail furled around it. On the bridge, Capt. Stylianos Viltas judged the angle of the breeze by eye. touched a few buttons on the console before him, and trimmed his sail to the 12-knot

Under power, the Mini -Lace was making her service speed of 8 knots. But when Capt. Vlitas cut her engines back to idle, the 3,000-dead weight-ton ship slowed, but she did not stop. The silent press of wind on sail kept her moving at a steady 3 to 4 knots.

The ship tacked a few times, trying out her new rig, and by 6 o'clock was back at her pier again. New Bedford was pretty much the same, except that the fishermen had gone

"I would characterize that voyage as a najor milestone in maritime history and the ational use of energy in bottom-line conomic terms," said Lloyd Bergeson from is office in the Windship Development Corp. Bergeson's company designed the Aini-Lace rig. She is the first commercial argo ship modified to take advantage of the vind since the age of sail ended. Sail Power Saves Money

For the first time since the turn of the cenury, a cold-hearted look at the economics of he merchant marine indicates that sail power an turn a better profit than diesel power a lone. The United States Maritime Administration (MARAD) took an earlier ook in 1974 — after the oil crisis of the year refore had sent prices from $2 to $11 a barrel. hat study, conducted by the University of Aichigan, concluded that sailpower for the nerchant fleet was feasible - but marginally nprofitable.

Now a barrel of marine burner costs$33, nd the picture has changed. Today, a 00.000-dead weight-ton foreign flag tanker avs $11,000 a day for fuel alone -- 65 perent of its total operating expenses. For american flag vessels, whose labor costs are igher, the figure is 40 percent. The 25,000 rincipal commercial ships operating today ow account for more than 8 percent of the stal oil consumption of the noncommunist ·orld.

This spring, MARAD issued a new report - the result of 4 months of study by Windup. It declares that small - to mediumzed ships, equipped with automated sailstems backed up by conventional power lants, offer fuel savings of 20 to 30 percent. re competitive in building or reprofit costs. nd promise total operational savings of 5 to

There is no romanticism about this," ergeson says. "This is the bottom line.

Ceres Hellenic Shipping Company, which operates a fleet of 100 vessels in its mini line. has also contracted to have a second vessel fitted this fall with a more advanced sail plan - a vertical airfoil called the wing-most. which computer studies suggest will be more efficient still.

The MARAD report selected the wingsail over a variety of other commercial sail plans, from the dynaship rig — a modern version of the square rig of old — to such exotic designs as the wind turbine, a deck-mounted windmill which would drive the ship's propellor. Windship, which is in the business of selling sail to ship owners tailored to specific cargo needs and sea routes, is pushing the wingsail.

Hard data, however, is not yet available from the sea trials of the Misi-Lace and Bergeson, a former shipyard manager with a Yankee shrewdness, declines to report even her fuel capacity at this stage.

Japanese Have Head Start He feels that misplaced romanticism has already hurt the cause of sail power in the U.S. merchant fleet, and that one sarcastic newspaper editorial in Washington set his own research program back a year, giving the Japanese a head start in development.

The head start was the 1,600-ton Shin. Aitoku Maru, the world's first sail-equipped oil tanker. Launched last summer, the ship has folding wing sails and a computer that automatically adjusts engine speed to maintain a given timetable. With the wind at 33 knots at a 90-degree angle to the vessel's course, the Shin -Aitoku Maru theoretically cruises at 15 knots by sail alone. Her builders report that the sailing rig was installed for a cost of $260,000. It has been predicted that the sails will cut the ship's annual fuel cost of $442,000 by 50 percent.

Wind Potential Alturing These figures have not yet been supported by evidence, but the lure of a free energy source has attracted interest from the U.S. Navy to individual maritime businesses -- all of whom see the potential of the wind as a free energy source.

Kenneth C. Morisseau, a mechanical engineer with the Naval Sea Systems Command, has proposed that the navy use sail power systems for fleet thus, tenders, and other support ships.

"To cope with the urgency of actual wartime missions, these naval auxiliaries and amphibious support ships would need to retain fossil fuel plants capable of 15 to 20 knots," Morisseau writes in a monograph, 'the age of sail - is it over?" "major advantages of sails for naval applications is that relatively normal peacetime use could occur without either the penalty of rapidly rising fuel costs or the loss of fossil fuel resources."

 Saiting Profitable Meanwhile, in Norfolk, Va., a colorful tugboat skipper has fitted his boat with two masts, dubbed her a "tugantine," and set out to yut his fuel bills in half - which could save him $500 on the round trip to Baltimore. Several West Coast tuna fishers have figger sails to their boats. An oil rig, being towed from the Gulf of Mexico to her station in the North Sea, was fitted with a single dacton sail. The ungainly tow was said to have gained a half-knot of speed for some of the trip.

Perhaps the grandest sail-power of all. and the one that comes closest to reviving the glamour of the great square-riggers, is the much-discussed Dynaship concept. The Dynaship is a modern square sail plan for a vessel as much as 500 feet long, with six 200-foot masts, each with five sails which could be set and furled mechanically without the need for the crew to go aloft. Such a ship would have potential average speed of 11 knots over appropriate trade routes, under sail power alone. The design was developed in the Shipbuilding Institue at Hamburg, Germany, in the 1950s, and United States license is held by Dynaship Corp. Of Palo Alto, Calif.

William Warner, president of Dynaship, has at sea is a 53-foot sailing fishing boat with a 20-ton refrigerated hold. The 'feresa,' named after a pygmy killer whale common to her operating area off Hawaii, is rigged with automatically furling triangular sails not unlike those of a yacht. She has a small diesel engine, but can make 8 knots steadily under sail alone.

'The Feresa sailed from Seattle to Honolulu, and she's been operating there for two months, and she still hasn't had to refuel," said Warner. "The important thing is that she's already making money for her owners. Just being in operation is a big step, because up till now its all been mostly talk. And we're saving, we think, about 75 percent of her normal fuel bill."

Chile Interested

Warner is now talking to maritime interests in Chile about a 70-to 100-foot version of the Feresa. "There are plenty of fisheries applications," he says. "For example, there used to be a mother ship to store the catch at Midway, which is a thousand miles from Hawaii. The price of fuel made that trip unprofitable, but sail would work. And among the small islands of the Pacific Trust Territories, a lot of the trading has just stop-ped because of fuel prices. You wouldn't even have competition anymore."

Commercial sailing vessels thus became obsolete at the moment of their first real efficiency, a fate similar to that which later befell the steam locomotive. Now, with modern technology, the efficiency of sail power can redouble again. Computers are available to show not only what shape sails work best, but to permit the entire rig - formerly worked by scores of men swarming aloft under the most abominable conditions — to be adjusted from a bridge consol at the touch of a button. Ship's crews need not increase in size, nor even study sailing: The ancient art of sail trim can be analyzed automatically.

In the future the Windship Corp. Envisions, tankers and freighters sprout wingsails. but continue to be fitted with substantial power plants. This development takes place among small to medium vessels, on routes with predictable winds such as the North Pacific and North Atlantic, and areas of heavy trading such as the Caribbean.

The result is more profit for the merchant marine - a profit which increases relatively as the cost of oil goes up - and a reduction in the expenditure of irreplaceable fossil fuels.

"You know," said William Warner, talking about the 1,000-mile run from Oahu to Midway, where he would like to place a sailpowered mother ship for tuna fishermen.

Shipowners are now awaiting with interest the bottom-line figures to be recorded by the mini -lace upon her return to the Houston-Trinidad run. Her performance can then be compared with her sister-ship, to be fitted with the wingsail later this year. Then, Windship expects, the merchant fleets of the World will begin sprouting sails.

Change is already in the air. The Liberty Ships of World War II had a design speed of TO Knots, which came to be seen as impo slow. In years since, ship design pressed steadily toward more speed, until the Sea-Land Corporation's SL7 containership came off the drawing boards capable of a full 33

. The SL7 was a state-of-the-art commercial thoroughbred, all right. But she gulped ever-more-costly fuel accordingly. So, this epitome of the oil-powered freighter has been withdrawn from service. Just like the clipper ships almost 100 years ago.

Takes four hours Outpatient system stops children's surgery fears

By Vte B. Frohikh

FRANKFURT, (INP) - Three-year-old Frank from Hanau (Federal Republic of Germany) had to be operated on for inguinal hernia. Normally, this means hospitalization for five days and all too often an absolute separation from parents. But Frank was lucky, not only was his mother with him up to the last minute before the operation - she was there when he emerged from the anaesthesia. A doctor's examination showed everything to be in order after the operation, and he was allowed to go home within four hours of leaving operation room. In the following few days, a doctor called daily to check Frank's progress, and his mother carried out the hospital's instructions.

Frank's parents are glad that their children's doctor told them it was possible to have Frank operated on as an outpatient. Some German towns and cities have surgical clinics carrying out just this kind of operation but Frankfurt is treading new ground with its special "out-patient operation center."

Set up at the end of 1980, it has now fully proved its worth. More than 400 operations have been carried out, half of them on children. At this special facility - initially a pilot project running for three years - all registered doctors in the city and surrounding areas have at their disposal two complete operating rooms, the necessary ante-rooms and rest rooms and a team of nurses and the senior anaesthetist, Dr. Franz Kuhn.

"The fact that surgery patients can be discharged once the effects of anaesthesia wear off means that we can reduce costs to about one tenth of normal," said Dr Kuhn.

But low costs are only one reason. For children, it's far more important to keep potential psychological harm to a minimum. A campaign committee calling itself "Child in hospital" is a vehement advocate of outpatient surgery. Children below the age of four years are exposed to major fears if deprived of permanent contact with their families, so that 80 percent of all children subjected to conventional methods suffer subsequent behavioural defects.

Experienced children's doctors with deeper understanding of what goes on in the minds of their little patients are convinced that, wherever medically feasible, outpatient treatment is always less of a risk for little children than keeping them in hospital. Among the surgery considered by the campaign committee as suitable for outpatient surgery are hemias, phimosis, correc-tion of prominent ears or deformed fungers and toes, tonsilectomy and eye squints.

The risk can be calculated in these cases. Dr. Kuhn said: "Most complications occur immediately after operations. We wait until the patients can walk properly again, then we discharge them." Another experience gained with small children: "If mother is present and the child is allowed home after the operation, his or her circulation gets back to normal much faster".

The doctor who performs the operation makes daily visits to his patients and remains responsible for their recovery. If a mother can't cope with post-operative treatment, she can always call in a mobile nurse working with the Frankfurt pilot project. In this way, the child remains in familiar surroundings and gets back to normal quickly.

Plastic Medflies next? Fruit lures inspectors

By Jerry Belcher

TORRANCE, Calif. (LAT) - A tree grows in Torrance — an apricot tree that sprouted and flourished but never bore fruit. Which is too bad, but not necessarily news. The Medfly, however, is news. What possible relationship is there between a bar-ren apricot tree and the Medfly?

The tree, about 14 feet high, grows in the front yard of Ivan (Johnny) Jurco's house here. Jurco is a man with a kindly if somewhat whimsical world view.

When the apricot tree failed to produce, Jurco felt sorry for it. He started buying artificial fruit (plastic apples, bananas, oranges, plums, grapes and tomatoes) and wiring them to the outherwise bare branches of the unfruited tree. Just to help make it feel better about itself.

Then, because he is a trifle quirky, Jurco began buying assorted plastic vegetables like carrots and radishes and also wiring them to the tree.

Lots of people took notice of the genetically unlikely smorgasbord arrayed in Jurco's tree. After he had his fun with the put-on, Jurco said, he would usually inform the onlookers that the crop was a fake - if they hadn't figured that out already. And everyone had a good laugh. Then a man who said he was an inspector from the Los Angeles Agricultural Commission, came by and said,"I see you have a fruit tree. I'd like to put a Medfly trap in it. I'll come by once a week and check the trap." He placed the trap in the tree, just inches from the plastic produce. He didn't say anything about the radishes, carrots and tomatoes that seemed to be growing there.

Jurco said that that particular inspector never came back. But another one did last month and replaced the trap. Like the first inspector, he said nothing about the odd assortment of plastic goodies that were apparently growing on the tree. The tree is still there, the plastic fruits and vegetables still dangle from its branches, and the Medfly trap is unoccupied. Jurco hopes that it remains that way. He also said he was not sure what all this meant — except that maybe the agricultural inspectors are not very keen observers.

"Maybe," he said, "they don't know the He would not speculate on whether that also might mean that they can't tell the difference between Medflies and butterflies. On the other hand, he said, maybe the inspectors did catch on to his horticultural prank, and are simply going along with the gag.

"Maybe," Jurco said, "they'll put a plastic Medfly in the trap when they come

Hundreds of thousands involved

No one wants to tell employees about exposure to cancer-causing chemicals

By Joanne Omang

WASHINGTON - Federal agencies know the names of hundreds of thousands of people who have been exposed to cancercausing chemicals on their jobs but have made no effort to tell them about the risk to their health. Nor has any effort been made to name or notify 21 million workers - one in every four - who are known to have been exposed to hazardous materials regulated by the Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA).

The National Insitute Occupation Safety and Health (NIOSH), a primary holder of this information, has used the lists of names only for research purposes, waiting for the people on them to die. Then the names are followed up, and if the causes of death can be learned, they become part of the tally the government uses to set up control standards for dangerous substances.

Pilot Programs underway A joint-notification pilot project of NIOSH and the Workers' Institute for Safety and Health, an arm of the AFL-CIO, is getting off the ground for 1,100 chemical-plant workers in Augusta, Ga., and another pilot program is under way for asbestos workers in Port Allegany, Pa.

For the Georgia chemical workers, the notification program comes nine years late: NIOSH learned of their exposure to a known carcinogen in 1972. Notification for thousands of other workers in the NIOSH files is still several years and billions of dollars away, if it comes at all.

The lists of names are on file at NIOSH and the National Cancer Institute, as well as at labor unions and in university research centers across the nation. They are the microfilmed records of current and former employees from job sites where researchers studied substances suspected of causing cancer, NIOSH officials estimate that their lists alone, which detail only places later found in involve carcinogens, include about 200.000 names.

While the labor unions who hold the information have made efforts, through publications or meetings, to get the word to their members, a majority of the workers involved are not unionized. In other cases the exposed workers have since left their jobs.

agency should do when it is reasonably certain that former workers have been exposed to a dangerous substance is not a new one. The uneasy conclusion has been that workers have the right to know about risks to their health, but that it would cost too much for the government to find everyone, notify them and then provide follow-up services.

Many bureaucrats think it is immoral to object on grounds of cost, but they never have agreed on who should have the responsibility of finding and notifying everone, who should pay for it and the best way to do it without scaring the workers into filing millions of lawsuits. As a result, nothing has been

"You can't just send out a letter saying, 'hey, you might have been exposed.' You have to have some kind of mechanism to take care of them once they know," said Philip Bierbaum, deputy director of NIOSH's Health Hazards Division. "That could cost hundreds of millions of dollars, and who's going to pay for it?"

NIOSH estimated at a 1977 Senate hearing that it would cost up to $40 million to find and notify all of the estimated 21 million workers who have been exposed to a hazardous substance, and that giving them all medical surveillance - not treatment - afterward, just to spot developing illness, would cost a staggering $ 54 billion. The figures have risen since then, but the estimate has not been updated, according to NIOSH Executive Officer Dr. Ron Coene.

"We see our role as research, not as a public health agency," Coene said. "We publish our results in technical reports not geared to workers, but for our peers and the regulators. The worker is not our primary audi-

NIOSH Sponsors Studies
But workers are NIOSH's primary subject. Armed by congress with the right to enter any workplace - a right confirmed by the U.S. Supreme Court - and the right to subpoena records for research purposes, NIOSH does two kinds of studies.

Oue, called a health-hazard evaluation. can be sparked by a complaint from three workers, an employer or a labor group and includes air and water sampling in a workplace, questioning employees and listing the materials they are handling.

If the overall finding is that some danger to the worker may exist. NIOSH notifies the company officers and any union at the plant, relying on them to spread the word. The plant, employment records are microfilmed as far back as they go, becoming part of what NIOSH calls a "cohort," the group of people all presumably exposed to that substance.

Minimum Notification Nonunion workers, who comprise 70 percent of the labor force, and fromer emplovees, even those who quit the day before NIOSH arrived at the scene, may never know about their exposure.

"We do a minimum notification," said Coene. "We don't make the individuals aware of the results of the study they were a part of, the collective decision on what's going on there." Why not? "It just never has been done," he said.

The second kind of NIOSH study looks into a substance or a process on an industrywide basis. These probes, which are launched either by the findings of a health-hazard evaluation or by outside research results. generally check a few selected plants typicalof the industry or the process. The files are microfilmed and the names added to the

In some cases NIOSH writes to a selection of names from the cohort, asking for healthinformation for a study of the substance involved. "It says if you have questions call this number," a NIOSH worker said, "but it doesn't mention the reason for the study."

In most cases, however, NIOSH has no personal contact with anyone in the cohort. It only wants to know which people on the list have died.

When the lists of the dead are obtained, NIOSH then tries to get death certificates, ... which is codes for cause of death and compiles for statistics. Once NIOSH decides those statistics show an increased risk of cancer or some other illness for exposed workers, it proposes to the Department of Labor that worker exposure be regulated. NIOSH has sent in 105 such recommendations since it was set up in 1970, but OSHA has only established regulations for 10 of

Zionists bomb car at Soviet mission

NEW YORK, Sept. 4 (AP) - A diplomat's car was firebombed early Friday near the Soviet mission to the United Nations, the second bombing attempt in as many days in the neighborhood of the mission, police said. No one was injured in the incident and police said they did not know if the car belonged to anyone based at the Soviet mission.

A telephone called to the Associated Press claimed a faction of the militant Jewish Defense League, which he called "Thunder of Zion," was responsible for both incidents.

The caller, who did not identify himself, said the group demanded the immediate release of "all Soviet Jews oppressed in the Soviet Union." Otherwise he warned. "Soviet blood will flow on New York

Police said a Molotov cocktail was used in Friday's bomb. It caused only minor damage to a vehicle with diplomatic license plates parked near the mission. Arno Weinstein of New York, director of the Jewish Defense League, commented, "it would be illegal to tell you we are responsible. But we fully support such actions." On Thursday morning, a telephone caller to the AP said he was from the "Thunder of Zion" and claimed responsibility for planting two gasoline-filled soda bottles armed with firecrackers under two cars registered to the Soviet mission. Neither of the devices exploded. Four others were found by a pedestrian in a nearby litter bin.

70% will survive nuclear attack, U.K. scientist hopes

YORK, England, Sept. 4 (AP) — A government scientist has said that up to 70 percent of the British population could survive a major nuclear attack, but rival experts strongly disputed his claim.

Gangs fight jackpot war in France

PARIS, Sept. 4 (AFP) - A gangiand war has broken out in France over the lucrative new "jackpor" slot-machine racket in France with two typically brutal slayings.

Rene Bouedkaz, a 41-year-old Corsioen slot-machine dealer, and his associate Gerard Chardonnier, 31, were both shot in separate incidents while driving their cars in Paris. Both had police records. In each case, two men on a powerful motorcycle roared up to the victim and the pillion passenger then opened fire Police have no clues to the mur-

But they have no doubt about the motive -it is one more move in the hitter struggle to obtain control of the slot-machine racket. French law differs from most countries over slot machines. It banned the "jackpot" ones which give a cash prize - the only ones that interest the criminal underworld.

The problem arises with the "jackpor" machine, made in Britain and the United States and imported through Belgium, One of these machines bring in an average of about 2.000 francs (about $350) daily. Roughly one-quarter is won by the client, and the rest divided between the "jackpot" owner and the bistro.

For the whole secret of this racket is that the gangs retain ownership of their "jackpot" slot machines and only lease them out to histros. Last year the gangs were only active in "placing" their machines in Marseilles and along the French Riviera, but in recent months they have been creeping northward until they have reached the vast Paris playground. This is where they have come across rival gangs, and why shootings have started. Police expect many more.

LOS ANGELES, Sept. 4 (AP) - Relatives of a college football star found hanged in a jail cell has filed a $50 million wrongful death claim after a coroner's inquest ruled that the student died "at the hands of another."

The claim against the city of Signal Hill was filed Thursday, one day after a coroner's jury ruled 5-4 that the player, Ron Settles, did not commit suicide, as police in the Los Angeles suburb contend.

The 21-year-old running back for California State University-Long Beach was found hanging from the bars of his cell June 2 after he was jailed on traffic charges. Settles' family contends police were responsible.

The wrongful death claim contends the city is guilty of negligent conduct by officers, negligent hiring and retention of officers, deprivation of Settles' civil rights and his right to live, and deprivation of the civil rights of his

"There is no question it (the claim) will be denied," said George Franscell, lawyer for Signal Hill police officers involved in the case. "It is outrageous, and the man hanged himself. It's as simple as that."

Los Angeles county Toroner Thomas Naguchi, who originally listed Settles' death a suicide, said the jury's finding "connotes not an accident and not suicide. That would mean homicide." Asked if that means police were responsible for the death, Naguchi said, "it

U.S. helps ensure peace in E. Asia, says Suzuki

OISO, Japan Sept. 4 (Agencies) - The United States military presence in East Asia was the most important factor for peace in the region, Japanese Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki said at the fifth Japan-America assembly here Friday.

Japan will help the countries in East Asia with their nation-building efforts and will play a political role to assure peace and stability in the region, he told the closing session of the private forum for dialogue between prominent Japanese and Americans at Oiso. south of Tokyo.

He said while a crisis does not exist in Asia that could result in a global catastrophe, the presence of U.S. military power itself is the most important factor that assures peace in the region. In his closing speech before some 80 Japanese and American delegates, Suzuki pointed out at the same time that the Soviet Union's moves were a factor of instability for the region.

Seeming to speak out to the United States on behalf of other Asian nations, he said the liberated markets of the advanced Western countries were an important factor supporting the economic development of East Asia.

On South Korea, Suzuki said Japan put a high value on the fact that South Korea's defense efforts and the presence of U.S. troops were helping to maintain the balance of power on the Korean peninsula.

U.S. Sen. John Glenn called on Japan Thursday night to cooperate with the United States in defending the Middle East and spend more than one percent of its gross national product (GNP) for national defense. Addressing the forum on the second day, he proposed that Japan make non-military contributions to American defense activities in the Middle east.

Glenn indirectly asked Japan to bear costs for the transportation of U.S. military material and equipment, maintenance of facilities and repair works in the region, saying that the cost to maintain American forces in the Middle East is soaring and the U.S. needs to transfer some of its military personnel and equipment from the Pacific to the Indian Ocean. Commenting on the Japanese government's policy limiting Japan's defense spending within one percent of its GNP, Glenn said that such a policy will endanger Japan and harm its friendly relations with other countries

Meanwhile, a former member of the U.S. National Security Council called Thursday for deployment of Cruise missiles in the western Pacific, a proposal which Japanese Foreign Minister Sunao Gonoda promptly rejected.

Richard Solomon told the Oiso assembly that the missiles would help counter the threat of a nuclear attack from Soviet bases in the region. He said the recent Soviet deployment of Mobile SS-20 medium-range missiles and backfire bombers had put the Asian region and local U.S. bases under the threat of such an assault.

Elephant species facing extinction

LONDON, Sept. 4 (AFP) - Elephants could be extinct before the end of the century, a Cambridge University biologist has warned. Stewart Eltringham told the British Association's annual meeting in York that there were once 23 species of elephants spread throughout the world but now only two remained - the African and the Asian.

He said recent estimates put the number of African species at 1,343,000 and that of the Asian species at somewhere between 13,220 and 42,000. "Numbers are falling in 18 of the 33 countries where the African elephant still exists and the Asian elephant is everywhere in decline." Eltringham said.

The greatest threat to African elephants is the ivory trade which has led to widespread poaching," he said. "The Asian elephant is more at risk from habitat destruction."

Canadians disagree on U.S. air safety

OTTAWA, Sept. 4 (AP) — Canadian transport officials and air traffic controllers gave conflicting opinions Thursday about the safety of U.S. airspace a month after 12,000 American controllers walked off their jobs.

Bill Robertson, president of the Canadian Air Traffic Control Association, said monitoring reports showed U.S. planes were getting closer all the time," in the air. "Pretty soon we won't be talking about how close they came, we'll be talking about why

Robertson spoke to reporters after a transport department official declared U.S. airspance safe despite the Aug. 3 walkout by the controllers, who were fired soon after by President Ronald Reagan.

"I'm totally satisfied...that they're operating a safe system, Walter McLeish, Canadian air administrator, told a news conference. He said a flight he took to Washington Tuesday to meet U.S. Federal Aviation Administration officials had convinced him American operations were as safe or safer than before the strike.

The American system has been operating at about 80 percent capacity, using nonstriking controllers and supervisors. An estimated 150 Canadian controllers briefly refused to handle traffic to and from the United States until their union and the government agreed on a means of monitoring trans-border air safety.

Fall in U.S. interest rates ruled out

WASHINGTON, Sept. 4 (AFP) — Rates of interest in the United States look like remaining high for a considerable time yet, most analysts have predicted.

Interest rates, they stressed, were fixed in relation to supply of and demand for liquidities but, on the supply side, the Federal Reserve Board seemed more determined than ever to restrict growth of the U.S. money suply severely, in order to remove the cancer of inflation. On the demand side, no reduction was expected in the immediate future.

The American economy appeared each at rates. It showed some signs of a decline, analysts said, but business was still far from a recession which would lessen the private sector's appetite for credit. It appears that Vokcker is sticking more. firmly than ever to his anti-inflationist policy, thus forcing the president to curtail his ambi-tions to rearm the United States.

'Windfall for companies'

Canadian oil accord flayed

OTTAWA, Sept. 4 (R) — Opposition politicians accused the government of going back on election pledges and fueling inflation by its new agreement with the oil producing province of Alberta.

But oil companies, which will get more cash from revenue-sharing measures in the agreement, said it would encourage exploration and development. Alberta Premier Peter Lougheed said the province's 21.5 percent oil production cuts in protest against federal energy policies would be reversed by next Alberta, which produces 90 percent of Canadian oil, slashed output by 120,000 barrels a day earlier this year. A final cut of 60.000 barrels was in force only a few hours before Lougheed and Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau signed the agreement Tuesday.

The accord provided for a new system under which prices of Canadian oil, subsidized by the government, will rise to 75 percent of world levels over five years. Revenue will be split between Ottawa, Alberta and the industry in a way which all seem happy with.

Dome Petroleum, one of the biggest Canadian oil firms and a leader in Arctic exploration, welcomed the accord as providing a sound basis for the petroleum industry to move Canada toward oil self-sufficiency.

But spokesman Ian Waddell of the Socialist New Democratic Party (NDP) said the extra revenue for the companies - $10 billion more over the next five years than under previous Ottawa plans - meant the industry was the big winner. "The big loser is the Canadian consumer, who must pay for this windfall," he said. Consumer oil prices will more than double by 1986 under the agreement, though they will stay well under those paid in most other countries.

The main opposition party, the Progressive Conservatives, accused the government of going back on promises made during last year's general election campaign to keep oil prices low. Conservative spokesman Michael Wilson said the Liberals had won power by pledging to keep oil prices down, but had in fact forced them higher. Canada, rich in oil and natural gas, has an overall energy surplus, because of which governments feel there is no need to charge world prices at home. But it imports about one-third of its oil needs. To keep prices even across the country, the government pays refiners in eastern Canada, which use imported oil, the difference between Alberta's price and world prices.

The domestic price is currently $18.75 (U.S. $15.60) a barrel — less than half the world level. Under the agreement, prices of 'old oil' from existing wells will rise in sixmonthly jumps to 75 percent of world levels by 1986. The pump price of petrol will rise to about 80 cents a liter or 3.60 dollars (3.00 U.S.) per gallon by 1987 - which is still cheaper than in most countries but more than double the present Canadian price.

A spokesman said Thursday the company and its intended subcontractors in Finland had now dropped the scheme for Libyan power station after persistent delays, possibly caused through administrative reorganiza-tion in Libya which had held it up for more than a year.

The decision to scrap the project on the present basis was not influenced by politics but had been affected by Soviet declaration that the Finnish offer was too expensive, he said. There was speculation that France might be prepared to compete with the Soviet Union over the opportunity to build the HATFIELD, England, Sept. 4 (AP) -Britain's first new jetliner for more than a decade—the British Aerospace 146—made its maiden flight Thursday and officials said it went even better than expected.

Swedes develop plastic bicycle

STOCKHOLM, Sept. 4 (AP) - A Swedish company says it has developed the world's first plastic bicycle, which it hopes will become a best-seller.

This is the first functioning plastic bicycle in the world," said project technical manager Ingvar Javer of Itera Development Center AB, a privately owned company.

The bike — which producers claim is virtually free of maintenance and rust - was developed by its former product innovators at automaker Volvo.

The new product was shown to the press this week in the west coast city of Goteborg. Newspaper reports were positive, although some reporters who rode the test bike said it was a bit wobbly. Most components - such as the unisex frame, the wheels, the handlebars and the forks - are made of composite, a plastic material enforced with glass

Javer, interviewed by the Associated Press Wednesday, said composite is "stronger than steel if you compare weight and property." At the press show a technician; demonstrated the strength of the plastic material by slamming an eight-spoke wheel into the street several times. "We felt bicycles had not changed for the last 100 years," Javer said. "using today's materials we developed a bet-

Debate on budget likely EEC talks open today

BRUSSELS, Sept. 4 (AFP) — The foreign ministers of the European Seconomic Com-munity's ten-member states are scheduled this coming weekend to garder once more for one of the semi-annual informal meetings, this time in Britain.

These meetings are not supposed to have any firm agends and are not expected either to come up with firm decisions. Nevertheless, informed circles here said that topics expected to come up would definetely include EEC budget reform and a wide range of international problems.

The meeting is to take place at Broket Hall, a stately home 30km (18 miles or so) from London, A seven-year-old tradition has it that these informal sessions are held in the country of the current chairman, right now Lord Carrington of Britain.

Concerning the budget issue, the EEC's executive commission last June came up with proposals that the ten ministers will now be able to examine. They focus on the community's agricultural budget making up 70 per-cent of the EEC budget overall.

The agricultural budget has traditionally benefited the most those countries with the biggest agricultural production, notably among them France. Britism on the other band receives very fittle of their money and in streamouthy opposed Will present system. Proposed will Blady be studied by the ministers about event lives of compensation being paid to those constries who benefit less from the common chest for EEC agriculture budget than the others.

The atmosphere at Brocket Hall, howeve risks being somewhat fromy what with the recent friction between Frence and Euly and another trade was over poultry between Britain and Prance.

International problems to be reviewed, EEC sources here predicted, would include the Middle East, with a likely report from French foreign minister Claude Chaysson following his recent visit to the area and encounter with Yasser Arafat, the head of the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Britain will prote the urgent reform of the BEC budget now that the two-month period which France requested to work out its post- attion has expired. British and West Germany object strongly to their large contributions to the budget, two-thirds of which is spent on a subsides and assistance to farmers.

LONDON, Sept. 4 (AP) - Gold and silver prices surged on European bullion markets Friday and the U.S. dollar slid in trading. Dealers said both the dollar's softness and the strength in precious metals was due in part to new Warsaw pact maneuvers near Poland, metals are a traditional refuge for investors in time of international tension.

The dollar's difficulties also were attributed to expectations of lower U.S. interest rates. Gold opened in London at a median $442.50 a troy ounce, up from late Thursday's level of 435.90. But profit-taking shaved about $2 off the price by the time dealers fixed a price of $440.50.

Silver in London was trading at $10.02 an ounce, up from 9.725 late Thursday and nearly a full dollar higher than where the metal opened the week. In Zurich, Europe's largest bullion center, gold was priced at a median $441.50 an ounce, up from Thursday's 437.50. In Hong Kong, gold rose to close at $440.84 an ounce.

French banks cut interest rates

PARIS, Sept. 4 (AFP) - French banks Friday reduced their interest rate from 15.3 percent to 14.5 percent as a contribution toward business recovery.

Faced with high U.S. interest rates and the need to defend the franc, Finance Minister Jacques Delors has been steadily reducing the official "guide rate" since June. Meanwhile, the banks trimmed their rates to business from 17 to 15.3 percent.

Delors told them two days ago that they should have reduced them more, observing that they were very quick to pass on rate increases but slow to pass on reduction.

On Thursday, the government announced the rules on long-term deposits, in a move to cut the cost of credit and facilitate loans to firms. Citing unnamed industry sources the paper said the meeting would be held sometime during the last 10 days of September. The venue was to be selected in the course of the current contacts between Kuwait and other members of the organization, it said.

The paper quoted the same sources as saying that Kuwaiti oil minister, Sheikh Ali Khalifa Al-Sabah, visited Saudi Arabia three days ago, when he held talks with his Saudi Arabian counterpart Sheikh Ahmed Zaki Yamani and delivered a message from the Kuwaiti head of state to King Khaled on that score.

The paper said the talks and the message were likely related to Kuwait's bid to convene an OPEC meeting to patch up the price differences. Unless OPEC members agree on a unified price for crude oil, the current deter ation will continue and expose the cartes to incalculable consequences, sources

Call to bolster N-development

LONDON, Sept. 4 (AFP) - Further development of nuclear power was urged here Friday by Pierre Desprairies, president of the Institut Français du Pettole, Georges Moynet, director of programs at Electricite de France, and Adnan mustafa, deputy secretary of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC).

They spoke at the annual meeting of the International Uranium Institute, where uranium producers' delegates warned that low uranium prices were curbing investment needed to meet demand at the close of the century.

Desprairies said the uranium industry should be encouraged "to the maximum" Most countries, especially those with a paucity of natural energy resources like those of West Europe and Japan, had a choice between oil and natural gas whose rates would rise when recovery took place, coal imports of which 60 percent required payment in hard currencies, and uranium.

The present weakening of oil rates was a ### temporary trend, the energy market being "very vulnerable and highly sensitive to the least fluctuation in growth rates," he said.

Moynet said that by 1990 it would be 45 to 77 percent cheaper to produce power with nuclear plants than with coal-fired plants. This included the cost of processing waste and dismantling old reactors. The OPEC speaker called on the International Monetary Fund (IMF), the World Bank and other financing bodies to provide joint financing totaling $67 billion needed by the Third World between now and 1990 for their nuclear programs.

Another speaker, Barry Lloyds of Pancontinental Mining, said uranium rates were depressed due to over-production and high uranium stocks internationally at the present time. The elut would continue for some years in spite of a fast rise in demand. This meant that prices would remain too low to encourage investment by the producers. In equipment they would need between 1985 and

Poland needs 3 years for recovery

WARSAW, Sept. 4 (AFP) - Poland will need two to three years to beat the current economic crisis, and then provided both industrial and agricultural production show a marked improvement, Deputy Premier Zbigniew Madej told the third plenum of the Communist Party central committee Friday.

Delivering a report on the economy in his capacity as chairman of the cabinet's planning committee, Madej said that industrial production, and notably vital coal output, had slumped by 18 percent over the past months compared to the same period last

Over the last seven months, exports fell by 24 percent over 1980, while exports to the West plummeted by 35 percent, Madej reported.

He added that this year Poland would be able to export only eight million tons of coal to the West against 26.7 million tons in 1979. Madej told the plenum that this 18 million ton shortfall represented a loss in foreign currency earnings of$1.3 billion. The Polish news agency PAP quoted the minister as commenting that such an amount might have been used "to put the national economy on a new track."

Agricultural results were equally gloomy, with the country's livestock down by 6.7 percent and purchases of replacement stock down by 27 percent over last year. However, the minister was able to report "good" prospects for grain, potato and sugar harvests.

Export boom helps Japan hike NGP 1.2%

helped Japan's economy expand by 1.2 percent between April and June, putting it on target for growth of more than five percent in the current financial year, financial figures showed Friday.

The statistics released by the economic planning agency (EPA) will almost certainly increase pressure on Japan to boost imports ... to prevent further trade friction with other major industrial nations.

A surge in exports coupled with slow gain in imports made a big contribution to Japan's economic growth from April to June, the first quarter of the financial year, EPA officials

The 1.2 percent rise in real gross national product (GNP) compared with a 1.1 percent rise in the previous quarter and is equivalent to a 5.1 percent increase at an annual rate. This would be the fastest growth rate in a major industrialized state. EPA officials said that although the growth in the year has made a good start, its dependence on external demand was a problem, and hinted some measures were necessary to boost domestic demand and stimulate imports.

Japan's international trade and industry minister, Rokusuke Tanaka, has already told reporters the government should adopt measures this month to stimulate business. In the first seven months of the 1981 calendar year, Japan had a visible trade surplus of $9.36 billion compared with a $3.85 billion deficit a year earlier. The value of exports, including cars, and industrial plant and equipment, rose 24.3 percent in the seven months of the year, while imports went up only 4.8 percent. The gain in exports was generally seen as the result of measures by the government in March to boost the economy. While Western nations look largely to tax and government spending to do this, Japan raised public works spending and promoted industrial exports. The base year or prices used in calculating Japan's GNP is changed every five years. Last year's growth, which was five percent when measured at 1970 prices would have been 3.8 percent based on 7, 5 prices.

Teacher bows to Marty Davis

NEW YORK, Sept. 4 (AP) — Riding his booming serve, top-seeded John McEnroe advanced to the third round of the U.S. Open Tennis behampionships with a 6-3, 6-0 6-3 victory over Tom Gullikson Thursday night in their first meeting since their controversial match at Wimbledon.

Showing the power and touch that has boosted him to the top of the tennis world, McEnroe provided a clinic for his left-handed foe, who tried gamely but in vain to stay in the Earlier, third-seeded Ivan Lendl of Czechoslovakia blasted Jeff Borowiak 7-6. 6-1, 7-6 and Marty Davis upset No. 10 Brian Teacher 2-6, 7-6, 6-2, 6-4 in Men's singles, while 12th-seeded Bettina Bungen of West Germany eliminated Ann Kiyomura 6-3, 3-6, 6-3 to advance to the third round of the women's singles.

McEnroe, the controversial Wimbledon champion who is attempting to capture his third consecutive U.S. Open crown at the National Tennis Center in Flushing Madow, heard his hometown crowd cheer loudest when Gullikson won the fourth game of the third set. It ended a soring of nine straight games that McEnroe won to erase any doubts about who was going to capture this second-round match. Gullikson finally broke McEnroe's serve, but it came in the seventh game of the final set as McEnroe was serving to win the match.

The brilliant McEnroe, dubbed "super brat" for his on-court antics and victories, broke Gullikson in the sixth game of the first set, the final point coming on a running backhand down the line that was good by only inches. Three points earlier, McEnroe had produced the reverse of that shot, drilling a running forehand down the line.

Gullikson began the second set by holding serve. Then started McEnroe's nine-game streak that was halted in the fourth game of the third set when Gullikson held at love.

Keen Tussle

Borowiak and Lendl battled on even terms throughout the first set, each holding serve. But Lendl captured the first three points in the tiebreaker, then held his serve to win 7-4.

The strong right-hander blew Borowiak off the court in the second set, winning the first five games before Borowiak could hold serve. Lendl then held move to a 2-0 lead.

America to risk two top athletes in World Cup

ROME, Sept. 4 (AP) - The United States decided Thursday to risk two of its greatest stars in the track and field World Cup despite Moses, who has been nursing a thigh strain. was entered for the 400 meters hurdles.

Carl Lewis, who strained his right hamstring in traning two weeks ago, expects to compete in the 100 meters, the long jump and the 4 x 100 relay.

"They are not quite at their best," said their coach "But I am confident they are fit enough to win their events."

Nine squads are competing in the threeday meet starting Friday night in Rome's Olympic Stadium.

The United States, Soviet Union and East Germany, the world's three most powerful track and field nations, have teams of their own. So has Italy, the host nation. And there are teams from Europe, the Americas, Africa, Asia and Oceania.

Moses, a virtually certain winner of his event if he is fit, is not staying with the rest of the U.S. squad and is training on his own. Lewis said: "I want to compete in all three of my events, and I am sure I can see it through. The World Cup is the biggest meet of this year. Everyone looks forward to it."

Mel Lattany was named for the American squad in place of Joe Phillips, who aggravated an old thigh injury while training in Brussels recently and did not come to Rome.

The cream of the world's athletes will be on view. The European team includes Britain's two world record holders, Steve Ovett (1,500 meters) and Sebastian Coe (800 meters).

"You can never predict world records," Coe said. "But I will tell you this. To win this race I will have to run the best 800 meters of

S. Korea strikes once in each half

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia Sept. 4 (AP) - South Korea beat Singapore 2-0 in the 25th Merdeka Soccer Tournament here

South Korea led 1-0 at halftime through Hwang Su Kun who scored in the 20th minute from inside the penalty box.

In the 23rd minute, Singapore missed a goal when a freekick was awarded. Pathmanathan's grounder from just outside the box was neatly pushed out by Korean goalkeeper Jung Sung Kyo. Both teams appeared evenly matched, but it was again the Koreans who scored in the 77th minute. Cho Kung Yon centered the ball from the left flank and Byun Byung Joo banged a first-timer. Yesterday, Japan scored a hard fought 3-2 victory over India while a selection team from Brazil beat Iraq 2-1.

With this win, Japan head Group 'A' with four points and are in a strong position to reach the semifinals. For India it was their

Borowiak stiffened in the third set, and the two battled stroke for stroke, sending it into another-tiebreaker. Lendl broke to take a 1-0 lead. But Borowiak broke right back. After the Czechoslovakian broke his opponent on the fifth point and went on to take a 5-2 advantage, Borowiak came back

He held his own serve to slice his deficit to 5-4. Then he broke Lendl two points later to pull to within one point again at 6-5, Borowiak serving. But Lendl closed out the gave, set and match when Borowiak netted a forehand vollev.

Davis worked his way through a weak field and won a $25,000 tournament in England just before the French. Open Except for that, he has failed to last past a second round this year. He needed four sets to oust Lloyd Bourne in the opening round here at America's premiere tennis event, then came Thursday's shocker.

Strong serve-and-volley player, Davis returned serve extremely well and appeared to break Teacher's confidence when he took the second-set tiebreaker.

Ramesh shines

After that, his booming serve propelled him past Teacher and into a third-round meeting with India's Ramesh Krishnan, who pulled a mild upset himself when he eliminated Stan Smith 6-4, 6-3, 6-3.

Smith, who won the U.S. Open in 1971 and captured a marathon five-setter Tuesday, was never really in the match. Every time groundstrokes failed him.

In matches involving other seeded players Thursday, No. 12 Johan Kriek of South Africa defeated Mike Depalmer 6-2, 6-3, 7-5 and No. 13 Yannick Noah of France outlasted Andy Andrews 6-3, 6-3, 7-7, 4-6, 6-2.

Easy for Chris

Chris Evert-Lloyd, the topseed in women's singles, knows that being No. 1 can be a lot of trouble. It means press conferences, lots of public appearances and lots of smiling. But Lloyd prefers it to being 2nd or 3rd.

"I'd rather be No. 1 and take what goes along with it," she said. She was No. 1 for a long time, lost it and has returned, and her footing there is stronger now than it has been in years. Wednesday night she appeared ever so briefly (47 minutes) on center court to defeat Kathrin Keil 6-1, 6-1.

Lloyd's stature is one aspect of the top women's seedings here that isn't in dispute. Most of the top players agree that Hana Mandlikova is seeded too low at No. 5. Mandlikova, the aggressive young Czechoslovak who finished second to Lloyd both at Wimbledon this year and the U.S. Open last year, has openly expressed her anger.

She has strong agreement from Lloyd. The problem is the U.S. Tennis Association, which makes the seedings.

No. 2 Andrea Jaeger, whose entry here was highly questionable after she injured a rotator cuff in her shoulder 10 days ago, won easily. After a full week without any tennis, she defeated Marie Christiane Calleja of France 6-1, 6-0.

Yamashita bags gold easily

MAASTRICHT, Netherlands, Sept. 4 (AFP) — The majestic judo machine called Yasuhiro Yamashita mauled the heavyweight field here Thursday at the World Judo Championships to win his second world title in a row.

The 24-year-old Japanese, who at 127 kg intimidates like Sonny Liston and moves like Muhammad Ali in his prime, beat Soviet Grigori Veritchev, 24, Europe's heavyweight titlist, easily on a nippon from holding down, 1:07 minutes from the end of the match.

Yamashita, a record five time in a row all-Japan champion and the first Japanese ever to compete in two categories at a World Championship, anihilated his early opposition, proceeding to the final with wins in 19 seconds, 1:14 minutes, 1:20 minutes and 15

The 28-year-old, who may be fighting in the open category for France, said that he had not had enough competition after recovering from injuries recently. The heavyweight bronze medals were won by Czech Vladimir Kocman, who also won a bronze at the Moscow Olympics, and the surprising young Finn Juha Salonen, 19.

Salonen was slaughtered by Yamashita in 1:14 minutes but fought back through the bronze requalifying rounds to meet and prevail over the much more experienced Cho. 21, and give Finland its first medal ever in the Judo World Championship.

Bronze medalists in light heavyweight were France's Roger Vachon and South Korean Hyong-Chu Ha: Vachon had an easy time with two waza aris over East German Ulf Rettig while a bleeding but brave Gunther Neureuther of West Germany did not have enough strength left to fight Ha, who had lost to Khubuluri in the semifinals,

Tennis Council fines McEnroe$7,250 For misconduct at Wimbledon

NEW YORK, Sept. 4 (AP) — The men's International Professional Tennis Council fined Wimbledon champion John McEnroe $2,250 and notified him of another fine of 5,000 for serious misconduct at the tournament, officials said Thursday.

Marshall Happer, administrator of the pro council, said the council is not considering suspending the world's No. 1 player.

Meanwhile, CBS executive produce

Frank Chirkinian, who is in charge of the 'network's U.S. Open Tennis Tournament coverage, said CBS would continue to use courtside microphones to pick up the sounds of the players despite a vehement the tennis star. "McEnroe came to our truck Wednesday and said, 'neither John nor any other member of my family will ever do an interview with you guys again unless you stop using those mikes," Chirkinian told the Associated Press. "Well, we're going to continue keeping microphones on John McEnroe, just as we do with any other player. If he doesn't want to cooperate with us, that's his problem." McEnroe was involved in a dispute with a CBS soundman at the ATP Championships in Cincinnati wo weefs ago. The network regularly has a soundman sitting in front of the umpire's chair, and he swings a microphone from one side of the court to the other to follow the sound of the match. McEnroe got angry when this microphone picked up his complaints to the umpire.

Happer, at a news conference during

John McEnroc Sr., the player's father and attorney, said through his socretary that they had made no decision on whether to appeal. Under the pro council's code of conduct the Wimbledon committee asked that McEnroe be fined $10,000, the maximum fine under the rules for a major offense. McEnroe was charged with aggravated behavior. Happer said. Among other things, McEnroe broke his racket in an angry outburst and called an official on court an "incompetent fool."

JEDDAH, Sept. 4 -- Jeddah RFC opened their season Tuesday evening with a 22-14 win over a visiting Royal Navy team in a fine match highlighted by a magnificent 15-minute second half burst that gave Jeddah all its points. The result will provide Jeddah with an encouraging start to a busy season and certainly gives their next opponents. Taif, a clear-warning for the Spet. 24 match.

However, despite the scoreline, the Jeddah selectors must surely view with concern an inept first-half performance by the Jeddah back division that kept the scoreline far lower than it might have been.

Opening lead diamonds. It seems a pity, if one side plays a hand well and the other side also plays the hand well, that there must inevitably be a loser. Nevertheless, the fact is that justice is not always served - for nobody has yet figured out how both sides can emerge winners in a given hand. Consider this deal where

West led the king of diamonds. East saw little chance of defeating the contract unless he could get a club ruff, so he overtook the king with the ace and returned a club. He was planning to win the first trump lead with the ace and put partner on lead with a diamond in order to get a club ruff.

ania threatens to declare emergency

WARSAW, Sept. 4 (Agencies) — Polish authorities have not ruled out the possibility of declaring a state of emergency, Communist Party Secretary Stanislaw Kania told this week's third central committee plenum in a speech published Friday.

Our enemies proclaim that the authorities will not introduce emergency powers", Kania told the plenum, "but I take this opportunity to state firmly and calmly that to defend socialism the authorities will take all necessary measures."

Noting that Polish authorities did not want to resort to emergency rule, and would 'not use this arm as a threat," Kania said: "When we speak of agreements, we are offering an alliance to all forces who are not against socialism.'

Although Kania did not mention Solidarity, it was clear that its more extreme factions

War games commence near Poland

MOSCOW, Sept. 4 (AP) - Soviet Army and Navy forces Friday began a week of maneuvers near the Soviet border with Poland, Moscow radio said. The war games started on the eve of the Polish Solidarity union's first congress.

The maneuvers, which are scheduled to last until Sept. 12, involve regular troops and reservists operating in Byelorussia and the Soviet Baltic republics in conjunction with naval units training along the coast, the radio said. Moscow radio claimed the reservists were involved only for the purpose of "retaining." The Kremlin has not disclosed how many troops are involved in the exercises. Under terms of the 1975 East-West Helsinki agreement, the Warsaw Pact and the North Atlantic Treaty Organization pledged to inform each other of the specific number of troops involved in maneuvers using more than 25,000 sol-

Defense Minister Dimitri F. Ustinov, a member of the Soviet Communist Party's ruling Politburo, is commanding the exercises, Soviet press reports said. Western sources called this unusual and said such commands usually are delegated to lower-ranking officers. However, Moscow radio quoted a Soviet newspaper report describing the exercises as "nothing extraordinary" and involving only a "limited force."

Exestia draws attention to the suspicious rumors about the exercise being spread by the Western press," the radio said, quoting a report Thursday in the Soviet government newspaper. It claimed the Western reports were saying the mancuvers are "intended to intimidate Western Europeans with a so-called Soviet counted among the "enemies" he referred to. Going on to mention Solidarity's national congress, opening in Gdansk Saturday, the party secretary noted that no union representatives from fellow Warsaw Pact nations had been invited to attend.

Kania said that if Solidarity had intended demonstrating that it "belongs to a different world," Polish society would be the judge of this move. He added that the congress was of "great importance" to Solidarity and the nation, as it was "important to know which trend will win the day, which will be the chosen direction and line of action."

The secretary said that this direction would decide whether Solidarity was to become "a constructive force of socialism or a destructive element in our social and economic life."

PRETORIA, Sept. 4 (Agencies) - South African troops killed two Soviet women during a skirmish in their invasion of Angola, Defense Force headquarters confirmed Friday. The South African Press Association also quoted defense officials as saying Soviet authorities had been notified of all the Soviet deaths occurred during the invasion.

Soviet women

The defense Force spokesman said a number of Soviets had been involved in the fighting during the South African invasion of Angola that began Aug. 24. "Some of them (Soviets) died and one was captured.

He declined to provide further details on the women or say how the Soviet government had been notified of the deaths. However, a Western diplomatic source in Pretoria told the Associated Press Thursday that one of the slain woman was the wife of a lietenant colonel, also killed in the fighting, and the other was married to a sergeant major captured by the South Africans.

So far, the Pretoria government has refused to present the sergeant major, identified as Nicolai Feodorvich Pestretsov, to reporters. But a picture of Pestretsov was made available earlier this week and Friday morning and his camouflage uniform, identity documents, black boots and leather belt were put on display at defense headquarters

The two documents were a military driver's license, issued by the Angolan Defense Department, and a military identity card, all in Portuguese. The two-piece camouflage suit was in good condition and showed no signs of injury, SAPA said. Meanwhile, an official of the territorial government of Soutwest Africa (Namibia) said in the capital of Windhoek that a total of 85 Angolans, including five Portuguese nationals, joined South African troops as they withdrew from Angola.

Solidarity meanwhile prepared Friday for its first national congress in a defiant mood despite Kania's warning of declaring a state of emergency.

A strike alert involving 350,000 wokers in the northern province of Bydgoszcz came into effect Friday and the Polish news agency PAP reported that the crews of six Polish fishing vessels in the south Atlantic had also PAP said the crewmen expressed dissatisfac-tion over the way Solidarity had defended their interests.

Solidarity declared the strike alert in Bydgoszcz to protest the authorities' decision to close an investigation of an incident there last March in which three Solidarity activists were beaten. The local Solidarity branch said it would declare a regionwide strike by Sept. 22 if the case was not reopened.

Meanwhile. Soviet newspapers Friday accused Polish government leaders of not standing up to "extremists" in Solidarity. In editorial comment following Thursday's plenary meeting of the Polish Communist Party the Soviet press said Solidarity arranged subversive meetings in Poland without hindr-

Celso Torrelio takes over as Bolivia president

LA PAZ. Bolivia. Sept. 4 (AP) - Bolvia's three-man military junta Friday named one of its own, army commander Gen. Celso Torrelio, as president replacing Gen. Luis Garcia Meza, who resigned under pressure, Aug. 4.

announcing the appointment. The 48-year-old Torrelio, army commander-in-chief and a member of the junta, was inaugurated Friday afternoon to form this Central American country's 191st government since it gained independence from Spain in 1825.

The other two junta members apparently will return to military duty, leaving Torrelio in full command of the government of this Andean nation of 5.5 million persons. Garcis Meza, 52, seized power in July 1980 from a civilian government and survived four coup attempt. But a fifth military revolt in August forced him to resign in favor of the junts made up of the commanders of the Army.

cocaine trade. Torrelio, who served briefly as interior minister under Garcia Meza, pledged to lead the Bolivian nation down roads of progress seeking by all means the welfare and the unity of the Bolivian people." He faces Bolivia's worst economic situation in recent years and growing labor unrest. Iraq reports heavy fighting BEIRUT, Sept. 4 (R) - Iran and Iraq have reported renewed heavy fighting in the war and Baghdad said its forces had crushed a two-pronged Iranian offensive. The Iraqi military high command said more than 5.000 Iranians were killed in some of the heaviest fighting since last September, the first month of the war. Reports of increased fighting coincided with mounting political violence inside Iran, where the president and prime minister died in a bomb attack at the weekend. Iraq said Iran had launched two armored thrusts during the last few days in the Susangerd area of Iran's southern oil-producing province of Khuzestan and around the town of Sar-e-Pol-e-Zahab. in the northern sector of the battlefront.

A military communique quoted by the official Iraqi News Agency (INA) said both Iranian attacks were repulsed. It said more than 3.000 Iranians were killed in the northern sector and 2,000 died in the south. Dozens of tanks were knocked out in fighting that lasted three days. INA reported Iraqi losses as 109 killed and said a number of tanks and armored personnel carriers were hit.
